He pleaded for the sake of the white locks of the old man at home; and the tears were in the eyes of Joseph, and his heart was troubled. Leave me with the strangers! There was the clash of arms as the soldiers retired, and the courtiers, in their splendid robes, bowed themselves out of the governor s presence. Then the massive curtains were drawn, and Joseph was alone with his brethren, alone with them as he had been when, in his childish, simple way, he told his dreams. And his brethren knew him not, but bowed before him. How strangely was his voice changed as he spoke to them now! Could it be the governor of Egypt? He was speaking to them as friend and equal, he had fallen on Benjamin s neck, and was weeping bitterly. Who could it be? JOSEPH TELLS HIS BRETHREN WHO HE IS. I am Joseph, he said, whom ye sold into Egypt. It was indeed the despised and hated Joseph, and they shook with fear as they saw him. He saw their fear, and hastened to reassure them. Be neither grieved nor angry with yourselves, he said, that ye sold me hither; for God did send me before you to preserve life. And now it became known that Joseph s brethren had arrived in Egypt; and soon the news was taken into Canaan, and old Jacob could scarcely believe...
